ICE CREAM.

My Ice Cream Manufactory, one of the largest in Virginia, still continues to supply private customers, Sunday schools, excursions, picnics, fairs, festivals and associations, as well as the trade, with that SUPERIOR CREAM that has trade, with that SUPERIOR CREAM that has made a name in this community, and is known everywhere as BRENGLE'S ICE CREAM. I could easily reduce its price by lowering its quality, but good cream, of fresh, pura, wholesome ingredients, cannot be furnished at a less price than I serve it. Of course, I could "grade my cream by the price," but my cream would lose the good name that years of fair dealing have won for it. I ask that persons alroad ordering 'Brengle's Cream' from third parties will assure themselves that the cream sent is certainly sure themselves that the cream sent is certainly from my establishment. I warrant my cream, and do not wish that inferior cream, sent out as A full line of celebrated pure, old Whiskeys, Brandies, Gin, Rum, &c., Massey & Co.'s Philadelphia and Clagett's Baltimore Ales, and Bergner & Engel's Lager Beer, in casks or bottles.

Singular Beaths Among the Ancients. It is not a little singular that the Greeks have scarcely ever failed to make the deaths of their literary heroes as marvelous as their lives. Homer, they tell us, died of a broken heart because he could not guess a riddle. As Horace had been warned by a witch that a chatterbox would be his death, so had Homer been warned by an oracle that he would be killed by a riddle. And his day came. Seeing-or rather hearing, for the tradition of his blindness is too universal to be discredited—some your fisher-men in a boat, he unfortunately asked them what sport they had had. To which they replied: "As many as we caught we left, as many as we could not catch we carry with us. This was too much for the author of the "Iliad"; he guessed and guessed till he could guess no longer, and finally died of sheer vexation. According to Gregory Naziarzan, Justia Martyr and Eustathius, Aristotle went off is precisely the same way, because he could not understand a more interesting riddle set by Nature, namely, the cause of the ebbing and flowing of the Euripus. "Since," he indignantly exclaimed, "I cannot conceive the Euripus, the ingenious inventor of the "horned" and "wailed" conhism having met with his mater. "vailed" sophism, having met with his motor, in Stilpo, who "caught" him with another sephism, which he was unable to solve, went home, wrote a book about it, and died of de-

Charles the Second's death, "should disdain to die, and only disappear"—absoond, that is to say, into the other world.

Now, as Charles died in his bed, and was a most unconscionable time about doing so, as he applogetically remarked to his attendants, he can scarcely be said to have illustrated Flatman's remark; but if we are to believe Athenacus and Æ ian, Philetas, though not a king, but a poor poet, actually did. He had reduced himself to such a pitch of tenuity by reflection and study that he was obliged to wear lead soles to his boots to keep himself from being blown away, or possibly from rising like a balloon into the celestial sphere. However, the end of Philetas was, as Athenaeus gravely assures us evaportion-he positively evaporated. A young gen-

"Kings," wrote Flatman, speaking of tleman known to Dryden quitted the world in He disappeared, was rarefied. For 'tis improper speech to say he died; He was exhaled; his great Creator drew

His spirit, as the sua the morning dew. This was possibly the end of Everard Feithius, an illustrious German scholar of the seventeenth century, and a friend of Do Thou and Cassau bon. He went one day into the house of a respeciable citizen in Rochelle, and was never afterward heard of. That he was not murdered seems clear, and the case was carefully siftedthat he was much too wise to walk into a well is equally clear. The only plausible interpretation of this, the most mysterious disappearance on record, is to suppose that, like Philetas and Oryden's young gentleman, poor Everard also evaporated. But our business is at present with the Greeks. Apacreen was cheked by a grane stone; Sophooles is said by some to have come to the same end, though according to others he died of joy in being victor in his last tragic contest. Euripides was torn in pieces by dogs bounded on by some wemen in revenge for his misogyo ism. Æichylus was killed by an eagle drop ring a tortoise on his bald head, mistaking, it is supposed the shining poll of the poet for a stone, and applying it to other uses than Melpomene would sanction. Alexis, according to Plutarch, fell dead on the etage while they were crowning him with laurel. Ibycus, one of the most passionate and brilliant of Hellenic lyrists, was murdered by some robbers in a desert, and revenged by the crows who were flying over-head when the bloody deed was done. Honest Heriod also came to a melancholy ead, though "he got his grave," for his corpse having been flung into the sos, it was solemnly brought on shore on the backs of dolphins. Eupolis, the great comic poet, was they say, thrown into the sea by Alcibiaies, in revenge for the poet's libels on him, without Hesiod's good fortune. Cleanthes, the Stoic, suffering from an ulcer in his mouth, and having been advised by his physician to abstain from food for three days. calmly observed at the end of the second asy that as he had now advanced so far on the road to death he did not think it worth while retracing his steps, persisted in abstience, and died of starvation. The Prince of Grammarians, Aristarchus, terminated a life of unbroken study in the same extraordinary way. Perhaps death was never approached so merrily as by Chrysippus. That venerable philosopher, if we are to credit a statement quoted by Diogenes Laertius, died from a fit of laughter brought on by seeing an ass eating figs. Tertullian, a grave isther of the church, be it remembered, tellaus that the efforts of the same poor innocent in trying to get down some thistles had a similar offect on Licinius Crassus, made him, in fact, langi himself into his grave. Amusement was no joke in those days. - Temple Bar.

[Communicated. 78 CLOSE CUSERVATIONS. The ladies on their rounds shopping this season will surely find out that one of the finest, completest and best selected stocks ever exhibited in this city most positively can be found at the extensive dry goods house of Isaac Bichberg, (the successor of Slaymaker Co.) This house has taken particular pride and care this season in not only laying one of the largest stocks ever exhibit .d before the people of Alexandria and vicinity, but there has been particular care taken in the selection of the most novel and fashionable styles the market produces, which are marked down at prices to compete with the closest figures here, in Washington, Baltimere or any other city in the Union. "Talk is cheap," but nobedy can tell us what is the price of it. Wo are prepared to convince our customers what they can save by looking around and then giving us a call. We have added several specialies to our stock, and find the demand great for them. We name only a few, such as the entire sale and control for Alexandria of Harris Bros'. Seamless Kid Gloves; the sole agency of the Charlottesville Woolen Mills; the sole and control agency of Rotshild's Cloaks, in all their styles and qualities, and several other leading manufacturers' goods; but, in particular, we would once more call the attention of the ladies to a special arrangement we have made with some of the first importers in New York, and are receiving this day about 150 different patterns of novelty for Sacks, Overskirts and Basques in the cheapest and most expensive goods manufactured. We positively are receiving the very latest and finest designs in these goods, and do honestly appeal to the ladies of Alexandria and vicinity to give us a call before purchasing elsewhere. We are determined to keep up the finest selection in Alexandria, and ask politely your liberal patronage.
